Rose From Poverty To Head One Of World's Largest Taxi Firms; Cleared Burma Road Traffic

Daniel G. Arnstein, president and owner of the Terminal Transportation System, of New York, and head of a mission to clear traffic on the Burma Road during World War II, died at the Harkness Pavilion, Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center, after a long illness. He was 70 years old and lived at the Hampshire House, says the New York Times. He also maintained residences in Beverly Hills, Calif., and Miami, Florida.

Mr. Arnstein was head of President Roosevelt's Commission on the Burma Road and was logistics adviser to the Army in World War II. He was a former board chairman of the Manhattan Casualty Co. and was a member of the Stock Exchange firm of L. Stanley Kahn & Co.

As president of Terminal Transportation, Inc., one of the world's largest taxicab and trucking firms, Mr. Arnstein was called upon by the Government in 1941 to break the Burma Road bottleneck. At that time it was the only open supply route into China. But it was hopelessly hampered by bureaucratic inefficiency, corruption and inexperience.

The United States had agreed to send China $1,000,000,000 in lend-lease materials, but wanted to be sure they could reach their destination before shipping them. Mr. Arnstein was called upon as a dollar-a-year man to give that assurance.

When he undertook the task in June, 1941, only 4,000 tons of supplies were being moved over the winding 726-mile road each month into China. Chinese war efforts against the Japanese were slowly being strangled. When he completed his task in September, shipments had doubled and within a few months they were averaging 16,000 tons.

Mr. Arnstein's efforts and accomplishments so impressed the Chinese that Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek offered him the Burma Road as a private concession if he would remain to supervise its operation. He declined the offer and set up a permanent American supervision system that operated efficiently until the war's end.

Born in Denver, Colorado, Mr. Arnstein was reared in Chicago. At thirteen, he was working for $3 a week in a packing firm. He graduated from that to driving a milk wagon at fifteen, says the New York Times. He also worked as a cab dispatcher for the Chicago Athletic Club. The taxi business got into his blood and at nineteen, he negotiated a $10,000 loan to start his own cab service.

With the start of World War I and his subsequent enlistment, Mr. Arnstein gave up his cabs but found himself still in the transportation business when the Army assigned him to Motor Transport. He was promoted from private to captain before the war's end.

After the war he returned to the taxicab business and eventually became general manager of the Yellow Cab Co. in Chicago. The company transferred him to New York.

He bought the Terminal System in 1939 and had headed it ever since. The taxi segment of the Terminal System, the Wags Transportation System, was named for a dachshund which was Mr. Arnstein's companion until its death in 1954. The dog's likeness appeared on the door of the Arnstein cabs.

Mr. Arnstein had an estate in Miami Beach and a summer place in Ontario, Canada, which he called Wags Lodge. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Patricia Arnstein; and two daughters, Mrs. Peter Schrager, of Chicago; and Mrs. Martin Rockmore, of Ossining, N. Y.

Mr. Arnstein's childhood and youth were spent in the raw and often brutal neighborhoods surrounding the slaughterhouses of Chicago's meat packers. He was born in Denver, the son of an impoverished tailor, says the New York Times. His father died when he was six years old, leaving his mother with a family of four. She opened a grocery in Chicago and raised the family in a small back room.

At eighteen, when he was driving a cab, he struck up a lifelong friendship with John Hertz.

Mr. Hertz, who founded the Walden Shaw Livery Service in Chicago, which became the Yellow Taxicab Company in 1915, depended on the young and dynamic Mr. Arnstein as his most trusted lieutenant. He was his strong right arm and main troubleshooter in the savage taxi wars where ruthless power was the key to success.

Through his middle years Mr. Arnstein had the physique of a fine athlete, and during his rough-and-tumble youth he was one of the first professional football players.

17 Major U. S. Jewish Units Ask Public Opinion To Aid In Soviet

Seventeen major American Jewish organizations, representing the largest segment of the country's Jewish community, joined in an appeal to "men of good-will everywhere" to help alleviate the plight of Soviet Jewry. In a Yom Kippur statement, the U.S. Jewish groups expressed "deep sorrow and ever-mounting concern over the tragic" position of the Jewish population of the U.S.S.R., estimated at between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000.

The statement was accompanied by a fact sheet detailing the disabilities Soviet Jews face both as a cultural group and a religious community as a result of official Soviet policy. This policy, it was asserted, stands in "sharp contrast" to the treatment of other ethnic and religious groups in the Soviet Union. The appeal called for bringing "the full weight of responsible public opinion to bear so that the tragic position of Soviet Jews may be alleviated. We find it difficult to believe that the Soviet authorities can refuse to take note of the collective concern of mankind."

Copies of the statement were sent to the headquarters of all United Nations delegations in New York, it was reported. The organizations signing the appeal included the major American Jewish religious bodies, Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform, plus national Jewish civic and communal groups representing the great majority of American Jews.

The action marks one of the rare occasions that U.S. Jewish lay and religious organizations representing so wide a segment of the Jewish community have joined hands in behalf of a group of fellow-Jews abroad. Signers were: American-Israel Public Affairs Committee; American Jewish Congress; American Trade Union Council for Labor Israel; American Zionist Council; Bnai Brith; Hadassah; Jewish Agency for Israel; Jewish Labor Committee; Jewish War Veterans of the U.S., Labor Zionist Movement; Mizrachi-Hapoel Hamizrachi; National Community Relations Advisory Council; National Council of Young Israel; Union of American Hebrew Congregations; Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America; United Synagogue of America; Zionist Organization of America.

The U.S.S.R.'s anti-Jewish policy, according to the statement, includes a "persistent refusal to restore their cultural institutions to Soviet Jews after years of forcible deprivations; the continued removal of Jews from most leading positions in Soviet political life; and a campaign of incitement in Russia and the Ukraine against Judaism. There is not a single Jewish school in the whole Soviet Union, even in the so-called 'Jewish Autonomous Region' of Birobidjan. While churches are being repaired and reopened, synagogues are being closed. The ban on the Hebrew language prevents Jewish children from even understanding the prayers of their religion."

The statement charged that "not only have the Soviet authorities ceased for many years now to enforce the penal clause against anti-Semitic incitement, but the Soviet press has been guided into publishing a vast number of scurrilous attacks upon Judaism as a religion and upon individual Jews as anti-social elements, publications which not only have an unmistakably anti-Semitic flavor but also act as incitement in a country where the public regards every publication as officially inspired."

Asserting that this policy "contradicts the very principles of equality which the Soviet authorities have professed," the Jewish organizations urged a "major change in policy towards Soviet Jewry," including: 1) The granting of full cultural and religious group rights and institutions in Yiddish and Hebrew to Soviet Jews, including the right to organize a nationwide federation of Jewish communities; 2) Permission to emigrate for purposes such as the reunion of dispersed families, "in accordance with international obligations assumed by the Soviet Union under the United Nations Charter"; 3) The resumption of organizational contact between Soviet Jews and Jewish groups in other parts of the world.

Harvard U. Helps To Uncover First Capital Of Israel

Harvard University is cooperating in a project to uncover the buried city of Shechem, Israel's first capital, and the first city in Palestine to be mentioned in the Bible. The site of the once-great city, a twenty-five-acre tell, or mound, in Jordan, has been under exploration since 1956 by Drew University and McCormick Theological Seminary.

Archaeologists from Drew and McCormick and specialists from Jordan and Europe this year, will probe the giant mound, a man-made hill built in successive stages upon ruins, says the New York Times. In 1957 the Drew-McCormick expedition found evidence that the earliest village at Shechem was built about 3500 B. C. But Shechem's greatest period began about 1700 B. C., when Syria and Palestine were absorbed into the Egyptian empire by the conquests of the Hyksos, the Asians who usurped the Egyptian throne.

Shechem became a powerful fortress. Testimony to its strength still exists in the remains of massive fortification walls, about thirty-five feet high. The walls were discovered during sporadic excavations by an Austro-German expedition that began in 1913.

An equally massive temple also was partly excavated. The combined teams leaving for Jordan will continue work on this structure, which has fortress walls more than seventeen feet thick.

The 1957 expedition also found evidence of how the defenses were breached when the Hyksos lost Shechem to Egyptian invaders in about 1550 B. C. The expedition supported the Biblical account that Shechem joined peacefully with the Israelites when they, in turn, conquered Palestine in the thirteenth century B. C.

Archaeologists also reported that no city existed from the eighth to the fourth century B. C. But, in a major discovery, it was established that Shechem again became a great city after the reign of Alexander the Great. It became the capital of the Samaritans, who rebuilt the ancient fortifications, says the New York Times. Destroyed and rebuilt several times, the city ceased to exist shortly after 128 B. C. when John Hyrcanus, high priest and prince of the Jews, destroyed it.

Historian Forecasts 'Age Of Exiles" Derived From Jewish Way To Save Identity

Dr. Arnold J. Toynbee has predicted that the world of the future will be one world politically but will contain different religious communities scattered throughout the world.

The British historian says that these communities will derive from the example of the Diaspora, or scattered communities established in exile by the Jews dispersed from their homeland in ancient days, reports the New York Times. A now dawning "third age" of human history, he says, could be called "the Age of Diasporas." The standard type of community, he says, would not be the present nation state but "world-encompassing" religious and "non-monopolistic" association.

"As a historian, peering into the future in the light of the past," he says, "I spy the wave of the future in the Jewish Diaspora."

Dr. Toynbee makes his forecast in an article entitled "Pioneer Destiny of Judaism" in the current number of Issues, published by the American Council for Judaism, an anti-Zionist organization.

He says mankind would choose one world because the only alternative would be race-suicide in an atomic age. The United States and other nation states would not disappear but would have local jobs to do, he says, such as "minding and mending the drain and administering other local utilities."

However, he says, this system would leave a "psychological vacuum" that would be filled "by those Diasporas that win longevity for themselves by turning into purely religious communities."

Dr. Toynbee says nation states have been fostered by the agricultural age but in the new age most people will be engaged in mechanized industry, reports the New York Times. This new "third age," he says, will resemble the pre-agricultural age in which people lived by food-gathering and hunting.

In contrast to the farmer, he goes on, the aboriginal food-gatherer and the ultra-modern industrial worker are like each other in being rootless. "Neither is confined within a cabbage patch," he says. "Both are free to roam over the face of the earth."

The Diasporas of the future will have no patch of the earth's surface to call exclusively their own, he says. But, he adds, there will be no patch on which they will not be represented by at least a sprinkling of local adherants.

Dr. Toynbee says the Jews were the first to learn how to preserve their identity as a community in exile, but their Diaspora pattern has been adopted by others. For example, he continues, most Americans of Irish or Scotch origin maintain their communal identity as Roman Catholics or Presbyterians, respectively, notwithstanding their political and social assimilation as Americans.

In the Diaspora of the future as he envisages it, "The Jewish American community can look forward confidently to being able to maintain a continuous communal identity through the process that will

The Story Of ORT In Iran: Ten Years Versus A Thousand-And-One Nights

BY ANNE-MARIE GENTILY AND PAUL GINIEWSKI

Our taxi stops at the big round plaza surrounded by shacks at the northeast limit of Teheran. A few hundred meters further, the town suddenly stops, melts into the brown earth of the vast plateau that seemed, when we saw it yesterday from the plane, not rooted, but lying like a huge camp, which the snowy range of the Alborz obliged it to form there centuries ago, and which had not made up its mind to settle. The burning noon sun dissipates the smell of oil and chlorine which is the smell of the modern Orient, under which, insidious and tenacious, the traditional smell of dust, urine, and ashes reawakens in gusts.

Our chauffeur gestures, calls, and soon a circle is formed round us. He waves a piece of paper that we had given him and on which the address of the ORT school is written in Persian. Useless ritual; he cannot read. The porter of our hotel gave him explanations but he seems to have forgotten them for he does not know where to go further. He talks, questions. People answer, but we are there, helpless and lost. Never in any of the numerous countries which we have visited have we been absolutely incapable of making ourselves understood. None of the languages that we know seem to have anything in common with this one, which is gentle, monotonous, invertebrate, and which notwithstanding is a first cousin of all our European languages.

Are we going to stay here all day? In less than two hours the vacation of "Now Rouz", the New Year, begins and the ORT schools will be closed for two weeks! Suddenly a young girl cries, "Yehoudim!" The Jews! And, triumphant, she gives instructions to our poor chauffeur who is so relieved. We answer "Merci, merci," which she understands, because this French word has become Persian. (It is enough to stress the first syllable.) And in a few minutes we are in front of what the Iranian Jews call proudly the "ORT City."

If not a city, it really is a big village. Inside its walls, rise numerous buildings, each one of which is a class or a workshop, spacious and well-lit. Instead of rising in height as in Montreuil, (in Paris) the ORT school spreads out in width around its vast swimming pool and its sports fields. There are not many trees. In the flower beds, the flowers will not appear for another few weeks, for in March at 3900 feet, it is still winter and when the sun sets, one freezes. But there is space and a quiet orderliness which, when one compares it to the confusion and the chaos of the populated neighborhoods we have just crossed, becomes beauty.

The "ORT City" is ten years old. This is very little time for such an achievement. We would say that it was born here by chance, if we did not know that the leadership of the World ORT Union is distinguished by a particular prescience of the various needs of the Jewish communities. Its beginnings were modest; these two little white cubes to the right of the swimming pool, as one enters, are the nucleus around which it developed. In building them, the first students, mostly immigrants from Iraq who were waiting in a transit camp quite close for the chance to leave for Israel, learned the rudiments of a trade which they might practice in the new country: masonry.

There are no more masonry courses in ORT, Teheran, today, for Iran is not short of masons. There are scarcely any more immigrants. One or two shacks are sufficient to house the Indian Jews that an El Al plane takes to Israel every Monday for a few days' wait in Iran. And now the "ORT City" occupies the vast space of the former transit-camp which is on the site of a very old Jewish cemetery. In the Orient, death is only another aspect of life. It seems natural, even logical, that the new generation should prepare for a better existence on the place where its ancestors rest. What is the most remarkable about the ORT School in Teheran is that it is so little, in appearance, like the ORT schools in Western countries.

Of course, the girls' school is strictly separated from the boys' school by a high wall with a very small door (don't forget that we are in the Orient!) The instruction is given by teachers trained in Anieres, Switzerland, and in Paris, who apply the same methods. The fashion magazines, the patterns and the fabrics are French. The notebook in which each first year student keeps her "productions," beginning with the first hem, through the embroidered buttonhole, is exactly the same as those we have looked through in Montreuil. And the superb Kurdish costume in red velvet, embroidered in gold, the crowning achievement of the last year's students, only accentuates still more this resemblance by the unexpectedness of its presence.

There is, however, one innovation which we have not seen elsewhere; a hairdressing course, the first ever to be organized in Iran!

The boys' school comprises, in addition to other classes for general instruction, workshops for mechanics, electro-mechanics, auto-mechanics, moulding, plumbing, industrial-drafting. Cabinet-making, reminds us of a craft which was prodigious and which has almost completely disappeared. The cabinet-making workshop is self-sustaining: it pays its own way, thanks to the sale of the articles made. One of the new hotels in Teheran has been furnished by ORT. We saw a charming little table ordered by the Princess Achraf, twin-sister of the Shah of Iran.

In the workshops, where future technicians are trained for young Iranian industry, we saw in showcases prototypes that even we, as lay observers can, after so many visits to ORT schools throughout the world, recognize, and models of instruments that the students make for their own use, as first assignments. The machines (supplied by World ORT Union, which also pays the teaching staff) are of the latest model. Under the cogwheel in the ORT insignia, the usual slogans are written in French, in Hebrew, and in Persian, in those Arab characters which resemble lace. Except for this, nothing seems strange to us.

Do you think that we regret this? That we would like to see, as in the Ispahan Bazaar, the survival of a world which has disappeared, the ORT students in caftans and round caps (the same caps that the Medi warriors wear in the Persepolis bas-reliefs) hammering copper, weaving multi-colored wools, or drawing in ivory enchanted forests of their dreams? Seeing these boys in work overalls, with their hands black from grease, is much more extraordinary, even if it is less picturesques.

It seemed inconceivable ten years ago and it is just at that time that the leaders of ORT conceived it. To accomplish it, they planned to prepare the cadres for a still non-existent industry, and themselves paid their first (and rather protesting) students! The responsibility they had taken upon themselves was great. And often at the end of the training, they had to help the graduates establish themselves, for in the beginning there were no openings for them in Iranian industry.

Today this Iranian industry is developing and hires the future ORT graduates in advance.

Tel Aviv Haircut

BY MARTIN PANZER

Israel is, among other things, a land in which genius flowers. Indeed, genius had to be a plentiful commodity to enable this tiny land to overcome so many obstacles before and since the day that shaggy-haired genius, David Ben-Gurion, gave the state a name. There is one genius in Israel, however, whose name has gone unsung in the thousands of columns of newsprint on Israel in this decade. He is Moshe, the barber on Ben Yehuda street in Tel Aviv.

Moshe is no ordinary barber. Not for him the simple requests, "Once over lightly," or "No machine on the sides." For Moshe does his barbering in Tel Aviv, and Tel Aviv is in Israel.

It was the beginning of my third week in Israel when I met Moshe. Lacking all but five or six words of the Hebrew language, I had been postponing the ordeal until my haircut could no longer be delayed. Somehow I would have to make a barber understand what I wanted done and how I wanted it done. I could resort to the sign language, or I could employ my limited knowledge of "Pinglish," a mixture of Hebrew and English, mostly English.

Hitching my walking shorts, I made for Ben Yehuda street, where I found Moshe's tonsorial establishment and entered gingerly. The shop was different, but not too different, from the shops in Times Square. At any rate, there was no mistaking the fact that it was a barber shop. A three-chair, sanitary shop.

"Shalom," said the one unoccupied barber.

Fortunately I knew this word for hello and goodbye and peace be with you. "Shalom," I replied.

However, this was hardly the first round. Indeed, it was merely the handshake before the bout. The barber and I faced each other in the center of the ring, taking measure. He led with a phrase that may have been Hungarian. I shook my head slowly from left to right. He tried a short jab in Russian. Again I parried. Once more he tried me out, this time in Polish. It missed the mark.

I began to grasp his style and stepped up to him with a short, "English?"

His face lighted up. "Naturlich," he said.

I pointed to my head. "Haircut," I ventured.

He nodded. "England?" he asked.

"No. United States."

"Ah, America."

"Yes."

"O.K.," he said. "American haircut. I do very perfectly American haircut. My name it is Moshe."

"Oh, you speak English."

"I told you, naturlich. I speak everything."

I sat in the chair and I was back at home. It felt the same, it tilted the same, and it whirled the same as Tony's chair back home. What is more, I got the same mess of tissues and towelling about my neck as I usually got from Tony. Moshe did a very neat job. He gave me a perfectly American haircut. Then, in a perfectly American manner, he said, "You need a wash."

And that was where I began to discover that the barber in Israel must be a genius to ply his trade. The soap he rubbed into my scalp was strangely unfamiliar, but he rubbed it in with the old familiar touch. He rubbed and rubbed and I waited for him to direct me to step down from the chair and sit down before a sink to be sprayed and dunked in the Tony manner. Instead, he wheeled the chair about and tilted it all the way back, in a way that no American chair that I have ever seen could tilt, until my head was halfway into the bowl of the sink behind it. And then, in this topsy-turvy manner, he sprayed and dunked.

The method had its advantages. For one thing, there were no soapy rivulets drawn into the collar of my shirt and down along my skin waistward. The law of gravity, which often caused this discomfort at Tony's, worked in Israel to draw the water away from my head and body and into the bowl. On the other hand, my blood was unaccustomed to travelling in this new direction, and my eardrums felt as though they were coming earthward in a supersonic dive.

When I was dry and upright again, I said to Moshe, "Why do you tilt your chairs backward? That's not the way we do it in the United States."

"This I will tell you," said Moshe, affably. He explained that since May of 1948 more than a million newcomers had arrived in Israel. They had come from approximately sixty lands over the face of the globe. In many of these lands the hirsute adornment of the male included a beard. If you dunked the bearded face forward into the sink, the beard became waterlogged. This was not pleasant for the owner of the beard. And so the backward tilt. And so, rather than take the unbearded men out of the chair and leave the bearded men in the chair, Israel had adopted the system — anyway Moshe had adopted the system — of uniformly tipping all men backward.

One thing led to another and I learned that there were many other complications in the art of barbering in Israel. In a generation or so there might be a typical Israeli haircut and shave, since the orientation of the country is westward. At present, however, the newcomers from the sixty nations still wanted their shaves, haircuts and beard trims done homestyle, as I had wanted mine. The barber in Israel had to know the styles of all the nations in all their modifications.

There were, too, differences in the texture of the hair and the beards of the barber's clients, since they included blonds from Germany and other European lands and dark-skinned brunettes from Yemen, Iraq, and Iran. He had to use varying amounts and types of shave cream and detergents to meet the needs of the differing follicles.

The beard trims were particularly difficult. Although, walking through the streets of Tel Aviv you would see the vast majority of pedestrians to be clean-shaven and looking very much like the pedestrians in any American street, there is no shortage of beards. According to Moshe, there were some seven thousand ways to trim beards, and he had to know them all. Nor could he operate merely by following copy. Many of the bearded gentry had their trims far apart in point of time and what they brought into the shop was often not even a hint of what they expected to take out with them. Few of his clients were artists and they rarely brought pictures or diagrams of what they wanted him to accomplish. Explanations were required — explanations in sixty tongues and dialects.

One of Moshe's most serious problems was the decision as to where the shave ended and the haircut began. Even in the United States in the Rock and Roll era the dividing line between face and sideburns presents its complications. Imagine, then, the complications faced by Moshe.

THE CLEAN LOOK of action

Now! Full-size living in new-size surprises

the Full size '61 BUICK

Buick LeSabre 4-Door Hardtop

AS FINE AS NEW AS YOU CAN GO

Now! Full comfort, full luxury in a trimmer, full size car

With a car that's so new clean through, Buick was able to start right down on the ground and compromise on no component all the way up.

IT STARTED WITH AN ALL-NEW FRAME

Buick's new X-frame made way for lower door sills, a smoother, quieter ride, easier handling and better insulation of the body from road shock.

The new frame allowed a NEW CONTROL-ARM SUSPENSION

From this came flatter cornering and mirror-smooth going over the bumps as well as the highway. Buick has a new semi-floating rear axle, too! This combines what engineers call Torque-Tube Drive and Hotchkiss Drive—giving you the finest features of both.

The new axle allowed a NEW HIDE-AWAY DRIVE SHAFT

Buick put a totally new kind of double-joint into a 2-piece drive shaft. This let it bend down under your feet - and down went the hump in the middle to give you far more flat floor space than before.

Smaller than big

Bigger than small

THE BEST OF BOTH WORLDS

Now! The room, ride, go, pride of the costliest cars plus the savings and ease of the small

It took combined GM and Buick ingenuity to work the near miracle which made this car possible. Here is FULL-SIZE LIVING WITH NEW-SIZE CONVENIENCE.

the Special-size BUICK SPECIAL

Buick Special Deluxe 4-Door Sedan

COMFORT! STRETCH OUT!

The Special gives you more headroom than most new-size cars, more legroom than most new-size cars, more shoulder room than most new-size cars—and more total room for comfort.

CANADA'S ONLY ALUMINUM TRANSMISSION

Not another new-size car has it! New Dual Path Turbine Drive is the liveliest automatic in any car. It's like having two transmissions—one with an oil connection for infinite smoothness, the other with a direct mechanical connection for greater go and greater gas savings.

CANADA'S FIRST ALUMINUM V8

puts the power in the Special. It develops astonishing power per pound. The Special got this power without adding weight. And there you have the start of a great gas savings story.

SAVINGS! TERRIFIC!

The Special gives you the gas savings of a compact without giving up go-power. It sells in a price area you'll like without giving up looks. The miracle explained: the smartest engineering in years plus the new wonder materials.

The 1961 Regular Buick Models Have Turbine Drive; New Styling Features Give More Comfort, Choices In Colours

General Motors of Canada introduced its 1961 line of regular Buick cars, and announced that its Turbine Drive transmission is standard equipment on every model.

All models have clean, sweeping lines, with little chrome. There is more headroom and greater riding comfort. The transmission tunnel has been lowered. Windshields have been restyled; and doors both front and rear, open wider for easier entry and exit. Interiors are more luxurious and there is a wide choice of decorator color schemes in leather, nylon and cordaveen.

Four V-8 engines are available. Each has a wide variety of aluminum alloy parts with a resultant weight reduction and efficiency increase for all Buick models.

Buick's famed turbine drive transmission has been reduced six inches in length and 20 pounds in weight through a new compact design. This permits substantial lowering of the floor tunnel. Automatic transmission is standard equipment on the LeSabre and all other series in the regular line.

A two-piece drive shaft with a specially designed constant-velocity universal joint is a new Buick concept and will be on all models. This "CV" universal joint resembles two conventional joints placed back-to-back and makes possible a high angle in the two drive shaft sections. This in turn permits a considerable reduction in the floor tunnel and thus has provided the greater interior legroom in all models.

An improved frame design — an X-frame providing fewer body mounts and consequently less road noise transfer — is incorporated in Buick's regular line. Side rails are built into the body.

There is nearly 18 cubic feet of useable trunk space, achieved through restyling and by stowing the spare tire on the trunk's front ledge. Standard luggage packs easily, standing upright.

Coil springs on all four corners of the car, a Buick trademark, are continued on all 1961 models. The control arm suspension system, with shock absorbers inside the front springs for greater protection against road hazards, uses rubber insulation mounts extensively both front and rear.

The transverse muffler system already introduced by Buick, has been improved and is used throughout the 1961 line. Mounted crosswise at the rear of the car, the muffler maintains a minimum of back pressure with consequently improved fuel economy and performance.

Finned aluminum front brake drums are used on the regular series, with the radial-fin design incorporated in the rear drums. Fifteen-inch wheels permit 12-inch diameter drums with a gross lining area of 197.3 square inches.

The 15 models in the regular Buick line include seven LeSabre, three Invictas, three Electras and two Electra 225s. Ten roof styles offer greater individuality between models. Fifteen exterior colors and two-tone combinations are available, with more than 100 interior color combinations and 16 seat styles.

In return for his dissertation on the problems of the barber in Israel, Moshe wanted to know only one thing: was it true, as he had heard, that the American Indian was beardless? I said I thought it was more or less a fact.

Didn't the American Indians need to shave? I thought they did not. "No, I don't think so," I said.

There was a dreamy look in Mosho's eyes, but he was a loyal Israeli. All he said was: "Some day I would like for a short visit to America, and meet some Indians."

Tests For An American Literature

BY DR. SOLOMON GRAYZEL, OF PHILADELPHIA, PA., EDITOR OF THE JEWISH PUBLICATION SOCIETY OF AMERICA

Is there such a thing as a Jewish literature in the diaspora? More specifically, can we hope for a flourishing literature in the English language that will reflect the life and hopes of American Jews?

Not too long ago the question concerning a diaspora literature used to evoke an expansionist answer. The tests for inclusion in Jewish literature were simple: The Jewish origin of the author and the Jewish contents of the book. Around the time of World War I, young and old, whoever possessed a measure of Jewish cultural awareness, debated whether Heinrich Heine's works might not be considered Jewish as well as German literature. In the 1930s, the temptation was great to adopt Thomas Mann's magnificent Joseph trilogy.

The question about what constitutes Jewish literature has been raised again in the course of the past year. Now, however, the tendency is to contract the limits and to permit only that to be called Jewish literature which is in Hebrew and Yiddish. In a sense, to be sure, this would regularize the concept of Jewish literature by tying it to a language, as is the case with other literatures. On the other hand, such a limitation strikes us as contrary to Jewish fact, experience and tradition.

The fact is that diaspora Jewish literature has always been multi-lingual. Whenever a fairly large number of Jews spoke a certain language, they used it to express themselves and to describe themselves in whatever literary form was current in their time and place. Leaving aside the Aramaic portions of the Bible and the Talmud, one segment of Jewish literature in a diaspora vernacular comes to mind at once in connection with the Greek-speaking Jews some centuries before and soon after the beginnings of the Christian era. Another such literature, though of a different type, was produced in Arabic. Surely no one would dream of denying a place in Jewish literature to the Arabic works of Saadia Gaon and Maimonides. Jews have used many languages, and any linguistic test would be quite beside the point.

One of the basic difficulties which we now encounter in deciding what is and what is not Jewish literature is due, not at all to language, but to a change in literary fashion which is reflected in the restricted meaning generally given to the term literature. The word has come to stand for hardly anything other than fiction. Even the essay, that far-ranging, more or less wise, generally didactic attempt to discuss some topic of broad interest which was a very popular literary form far into the 19th century, has ceased to have much appeal. Poetry is quite beyond the modern reader's grasp. Philosophical writing has become limited to the scholars and the scholarly; and works on religion appeal, with few exceptions, to the theologically-minded or the maudlin.

Now and then, by accident, we have a Bertrand Russell or a George Santayana and, on the Jewish side, a Schechter or a Heschel, whose writings possess literary grace and find wider acceptance. But even they are blithely ignored by the vast majority of readers. To read means to enjoy popular fiction. It is the price we pay for democratic literacy.

This has clearly not been the traditional Jewish view of literature, where fiction used to play a minor role. The modern Jew, morever, would be well advised against too ready acceptance of the current definition. It is not at all unlikely that the literary fashion will change in the cultured world about us: that the thoughtful essay will come back into fashion, that poetry will return to favor, and that philosophy and history will resume their primacy in literary life. Readers may get tired of contrived plots and their made-to-order characters. The growing interest in biography already presages the change. Thus literature in a higher sense may before long come closer to the type of writing which has historically been characteristic of the Jewish people. And this kind of writing in the Jewish field is as certain to be done in English as it was done in Greek, Arabic, or Hebrew.

If, on the one hand, language and literary genre offer no barrier to the development of a diaspora Jewish literature, the origin of an author, on the other hand, gives no assurance that his work will have Jewish character. Herman Wouk's "Caine Mutiny" cannot be listed among Jewish novels, any more than can be thoughtful works of Waldo Frank or the popular novels of Edna Ferber. Moreover, the Jewish nature of its contents and characters is equally inconclusive as a test of a novel's Jewishness. The recent spate of novels in which Jewish life and the Jewish people are caricatured, even when they are written by Jews, has no more claim to being considered Jewish literature than does Hitler's "Mein Kampf" which also says much about Jews. Nor can we consider Jewish those works of fiction written by Jews or non-Jews in which Jews figure, to a greater or lesser extent, as either heroic or villainous characters (like "The Young Lions" whose author was Jewish, and "By Love Possessed" whose author was non-Jewish).

All this is as it should be: Jews must figure in an American novel because they constitute part of the total American scene. Literary critics may welcome such novels into American literature, or reject them on the basis of style or craftsmanship or whatever other criteria the critics set up as tests of quality. Jews, however, cannot accept them into an American Jewish literature unless they meet two further tests: the one of comprehension, the other of tradition.

When one considers those works of fiction which are undeniably Jewish, one finds that they possess the following characteristics: They make the Jewish situation central to their story; the problems they pose are such as none other than a Jewish American would encounter or want to solve. They then proceed to discuss the characters and their problems with understanding, appreciation, and compassion. This is what has made Ab Cahan's "The Rise of David Levinsky" the outstanding example of what an American Jewish story should be. This, too, is what has made Ludwig Lewisohn's "The Island Within" a good Jewish story. Even Wouk and Philip Roth, for all their portrayal of tawdriness and vulgarity in American Jewish life, can be said to have made a contribution to this type of literature because they know the Jewish situation and they discuss it in sorrow rather than with scorn. Bernard Malamud, above all, far-fetched though some of his plots may be, has shown insight into Jewish character.

There is one other quality which the books just mentioned possess to a greater or lesser degree. It is the traditional Jewish attitude of social awareness. The fact is that Jewish literary activity in the many centuries which preceded ours was directed toward social improvement in terms of morals, ethics, and the molding of character. Biblical, rabbinic, and philosophical works, midrash, poetry, and law stressed the one goal of "tikkun ha'olam", the improvement of the world. Of course, the best non-Jewish contributors to every literature have also expressed it; but our point is that no book can qualify for Jewish literature unless this viewpoint lies at its base. Without it we will have, as we already do have in considerable numbers, not a Jewish literature, but stray novels about Jews, exotic literary by-products of American life. One can find them by the dozen; they are without perception, without meaning, without positive influence.

It seems clear that, in the course of the past half century, we in the United States have laid the foundations for an American Jewish literature, both of the broader kind demanded by Jewish tradition and of the narrower fictional type. A group as large and as energetic as the American Jews is bound to attract attention; Jewish as well as non-Jewish novelists are certain to want to describe and interpret it, and many already have done so. Whether these works, written or to be written, deserve to be dignified as Jewish literature, must depend, not on the language in which they appear, but on the ability of the author to explore and appreciate the struggles involved in maintaining the purity of Jewish life in the midst of a frequently unsympathetic, if not discouraging, environment, and on his desire to describe this struggle seriously and without frivolous playing to the galleries with wisdom and compassion.

All this assumes, of course, that such future authors will continue to see a struggle for values that are worth while. Ultimately literature is a function of the culture from which it rises. This is why the future of Jewish literature depends directly on the vitality of American Jewish life.

THE STORY OF ORT IN IRAN

Though there are now other trade schools, the ORT schools are considered "pilot schools," in the words of the Iranian Minister of Education. Other schools even send instructors to the ORT schools for training. The Iranian Government gives ORT Iran a subvention. In ten years, ORT has trained 25,000 young girls and young boys. These students have learned a trade adapted to the needs of the country which is trying to eradicate its technical backwardness.

This task is not easy. Money, goodwill, examples are not enough. Iran offers us today a disconcerting spectacle: a civilization on the American model, super-imposed, like a light varnish, on emptiness. On the chaotic emptiness which separates the Iran of the beginning of our century from the fabulous, rich, materially and spiritually productive Persia which existed (a little less smiling than in The Thousand-And-One-Nights and the reports of travellers) perhaps up to the eighteenth century. We have an Iran with jet-propulsion planes but no roads; an Iran with television-networks but no canals; with automatic telephones but with much of its populace illiterate. And particularly, an Iran with oil (and all that this implies in foreign currency.)

There is a great influx of imported merchandise, which it is pointless to produce in the country, and consequently, an apathy which, unfortunately, corresponds well to a temperament formed by thirteen centuries of Mohammedanism. It is against this apathy that one must struggle first, in order to give to his brilliant superstructure the solid base that it needs to be more than illusory.

In this struggle, ORT Iran plays a pioneer role by transforming the mentality of the Jewish community through its re-evaluation of manual work. It is creating a class of technicians who will point the way to their non-Jewish co-citizens, just as at the end of the last century their parents, educated in the schools of Alliance Israelite Universelle, formed the first wave of the middle class. By drawing the young Jews away from commercial careers which are overcrowded, and from the liberal professions when they are not gifted enough to distinguish themselves in them, ORT has accomplished in ten years a veritable social revolution.

When it will succeed in attracting the children of those who live in abject misery, the grime and indolence of the Jewish section, then it will make out of the oldest, and today the largest, Oriental Jewish community, an important factor in the transformation of Iran into a modern country. This is the goal to which ORT is dedicated today.

Women's American ORT (Organization For Rehabilitation Through Training) is a membership organization affiliated with the American ORT Federation which currently receives funds, exclusive of membership dues, by special agreement with the Joint Distribution Committee, a member agency of the United Jewish Appeal.
